Dame Barbara Cartland DBE (Edgbaston, Birmingham, England, July 9, 1901 – May 21, 2000) was one of the most successful writers of romance novels of all time. She also became one of England's most popular media personalities, appearing often at public events and on television, dressed in her trademark pink and discoursing on love, health and social issues.

The right diet directs sexual energy into the parts that matter.

- Cartland, Barbara

A man will teach his wife what is needed to arouse his desires. And there is no reason for a woman to know any more than what her husband is prepared to teach her. If she gets married knowing far too much about what she wants and doesn't want then she will be ready to find fault with her husband.

- Cartland, Barbara

A woman should say: Have I made him happy? Is he satisfied? Does he love me more than he loved me before? Is he likely to go to bed with another woman? If he does, then it's the wife's fault because she is not trying to make him happy.

- Cartland, Barbara

Every man has been brought up with the idea that decent women don't pop in and out of bed; he has always been told by his mother that nice girls don't. He finds, of course, when he gets older that this may be untrue -- but only in a certain section of society.

- Cartland, Barbara

The great majority of people in England and America are modest, decent and pure-minded and the amount of virgins in the world today is stupendous.

- Cartland, Barbara

A woman asking Am I good? Am I satisfied? is extremely selfish. The less women fuss about themselves, the less they talk to other women, the more they try to please their husbands, the happier the marriage is going to be.

- Cartland, Barbara

I have always found women difficult. I don't really understand them. To begin with, few women tell the truth.
