The will is a powerful ally and desperate enemy. When not subdued by self-control, it becomes a tyrant of selfishness. Under the yoke of self-control however, it is a driving force of perseverance.

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

Doing what is expected is boring. Go beyond mediocre and aim toward excellence!

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

Discipline is denying the favored choice in pursuit of a higher goal.

Mastery of Self: A noble aim, impossible to grasp perfectly. The Hero: self, the embodiment of diligence. The Enemy: self, its laziest form of me. The struggle: continual. I cannot win, for I lack the strength to best my quality. However, by God's mercy, I'm enabled to make right choices and partake in all-encompassing Victory.

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

What I say must be under constant scrutiny. It is not enough to silence hurtful speech; I must endeavor to train this wiliest of muscles to enrich the lives of others.

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

On occasion, I derive great satisfaction from imagining my destructive powers onto such things as lamp posts, trees, and piles of leaves.

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

DdEEterMI-NAAAAAtion: The process is painful, draining, and provides no ultimate guarantee. It is only for the stout of heart; the brave, the true . . . and those who have no alternative but to succeed.

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

Self-control in emotion is most difficult to master. Refusing the dictatorship of capricious emotion, I have found that the ability to exhibit the right emotion often resides with acting on the hard choice.

- Vanderlinden, Natasha

Responsibility is the ability to give a response, that is, an answer for what I have or have not done. Essentially, responsibility means maturity.
